Use of languages

- Principal working language: catalan (cat)
- Some groups entirely in English: No
- Some groups entirely in Catalan: Yes
- Some groups entirely in Spanish: No

Prerequisites

In order to follow the course pace, it is not necessary to have studied Anthropology, but it is necessary to have studied Introduction to Social and Cultural Anthropology, and East Asian Society and to have learnt Social Science specific tools. For this purpose, students should review theoretical and methodological contents learnt during those subjects. They should also have assimilated Gender and Society in East Asia, Modern and Contemporary East Asian Literature, and East Asian Art and Culture.

Likewise, since most of the readings will be written in English, it is necessary to have a minimum level of reading comprehension in English in order to understand both compulsory and complementary readings. If the student lacks this ability, he will not be able to really follow the course pace.

Since it forms part of the specialisation in Culture, Art and Literature of East Asia, this course is complemented by Advanced Issues in East Asian Art and Popular Culture, but it is not compulsory to enrol in both if the student does not want to obtain that specialization.

Students who wish to do their bachelor's degree final project following a contrastive perspective or a perspective next to cultural studies, should enrol in this course since, if it were not the case, they would have to independently compensate methodological and theoretical lacks.

Objectives and Contextualisation

East Asian Comparative Cultural Studies is a course focusing on transnational and negotiated dimension of cultural processes and dynamics. It offers an approach based on the University of Birmingham's Centre for Contemporary Cultural Studies' approach, which focuses on the importance of agents involved in cultural practices and on political and fighting dimension of power regarding all the cultural processes' social regulation. The course is not based on cross-cultural studies variety, whose peak was at the end of the 90s and at the beginning of the century with figures as Geert Hofstede.

The students will become familiar with cultural studies from different authors from East Asian region and/or who considered cultural phenomena/aspects of the region's social realities. They will also assimilate origins and diversity of approaches and methodologies considered in Cultural Studies as a hybrid discipline.

The following elements are included in specific objectives:

- Acquire theoretical and methodological knowledge appropriate to the analysis of the construction and reproduction of cultural perceptions related to prescriptive social speeches.
Know the origin of cultural studies basing on literary studies’ different schools and the difference between United Kingdom and United States of America's schools. Knowing the field's main current figures and those figures being specialized in cultural contrastive studies from East Asian point of view.

Use theoretical tools and the analysis of cultural studies to communication media and new social networks provided by ICT.

Integrate interdisciplinary knowledge acquired during the bachelor's degree in order to offer reasoning and studies historically placed and enriched by human multiplicity, and not to limit to a unique approach or an abstract and timeless analysis. Notice that specialization and preparation are not just contents or titles (easily available by different means), but mostly method: rigour, exigency and auto-critical ability. Make East Asian Studies graduated specialists basing on the fact being worked and argued as specialists, but not to make them to just accumulate knowledge previously presented as specialized.

Improve critical sense and individual analytical ability, as well as debate ability and intercultural and communicative abilities directed to exchange ideas and experiences.

- Basics and origins of Cultural Studies: Birmingham School and Stuart Hall.
- Examples of applied Comparative Cultural Studies: electrical appliances market and its postwar expansion to Japan and the USA, Sanrio's global strategy and its licenses of Hello Kitty.

Unit 2. Transhumanism and cyberDitation shaping in popular culture and different countries' collective imagination

- Korea: watching I'm a cyborg, but that's OK (Park Chan-wook). Analysis of projection element when making a fiction about psychological/social/family conflicts repressed in other channels of social expression. Inter-subjectivity vis-à-vis individualism or how there cannot exist a sense of the other. Tools and institutions disciplining body and soul.
- Japan: Akira, Katsuhiro tomo; Ghost in the Shell and Innocence, Oshii Mamoru. A transhumanism more next to body horror and a transhumanism of philosophical speculation. Connections with filmographies and intellectual influences from other countries (influences both received and done). The cyborg as an important destabilizer of hegemonic systems configuring gender, identity, working specializations, social inequalities and the human condition.
- Comparing films from countries not belonging to East Asian cultural field: Kike Maíllo's Eva (2011) and Spike Jonze's Her (2013). New concerns and sensitivities appearing in last films exploring trans-humanist issues.

Unit 3. The urban landscape in China's evolution during the last century.

- In this part of the class we will analyze how the urban space identified itself within the discourse of modernity in China in the last century. We will have a closer look at three key periods: from the beginning of the Republic to the Second World War, marked by the creation of the modern metropolis imaginary; the Maoist period and the time just after that, where the dichotomy between city and countryside influences structures of Chinese society; and finally the last decades, when the fast urban development in the region is a symptom of the fast economic and social change.
- During the class we will address issues such as the presence of the woman and the family disintegration in the urban space, the use of the public space by the political power, the aspects of urban modernity such as the fluctuant population.

Methodology

(To see assessment activities mentioned in the following methodological explanations, see "Assessment criteria").

East Asian Comparative Cultural Studies classes will be basically based on a critical reading/analysis of texts chosen by the teachers and commented in class. Texts will be both written and audiovisual and will be shown during class.

Another material will also be shown in order to go deeper in topics discussed by means of the main texts.

During debate and idea-sharing sessions, the teachers will guide the conversation and establish debate and analysis elements.

At the beginning of the course, some master classes will take place in order to introduce theoretical approaches and approximations of Cultural Studies which will have to be complemented by reading recommended materials. Cultural Studies' situation in Europa, the USA and East Asia will be analysed.

In short, this course requires a high reading commitment in order to acquire relevant theoretical tools and the ability to add them in a productive way to intellectual and dialogical abilities. The type of critique and analysis to be developed by means of these classes is not like the media and informational critique model usually employed—both articles presentation and written work cannot be just argumentative summaries or comments from blogs having been recycled; they have to be supported in academic structure and argumentation.
