Objectives and Contextualisation

The overall purpose of this course will be to explore aspects of the history of Elizabethan-Jacobean drama by focussing on its two main genres, namely, comedy and tragedy. We will examine the main transformations that these two genres underwent in the late sixteenth and the early seventeenth century. It will attempt to describe and contextualize theatre understood as an evolving cultural practice, and will include the possibility of a critique of dramatic art. The examination of five masterpieces by the leading playwright of the period, William Shakespeare, will allow students to get a sense of the rich variety of the early modern stage and gain an understanding of the complex ways in which drama, culture, and society interacted at this crucial moment of English and European culture.

- Acquiring a solid knowledge of the cultural context that generated Elizabethan and Jacobean drama.
- Reaching an adequate understanding of the relationship between social/religious change in Early Modern England and the developments in drama.
- Understanding the links between early modern drama and other literary forms of the period (poetry, prose romance, the beginnings of the essay)
- Reaching a solid perspective of the relationship between the new developments in drama and the emerging forms of individualism and self-configuration.
- Acquiring a solid perspective on the discourses on gender, sexuality, religion and politics were projected and discussed on the stage.

Evaluation

1. Class participation = 10%
2. Oral presentation = 40% (end of March)
2. Paper (2,500 words, 4 secondary sources) (individual) = 50% (end of May)

-Class participation will be required on a regular basis. The students will not only be expected to answer the teacher's questions, but to generate some debates on their own initiative

-In the exam, the students will be expected not only to show an adequate mastery of the texts that they have read, but also of the relevant articles from the bibliography that will have been specified at different moments though the course.

-In the paper, they will be expected to establish adequate links between the texts that will be studied and other texts and contexts, from the Renaissance to the present day. The specific subjects for the papers will have to be chosen by the students themselves. They will be expected to project some personal perspective into the subject they have chosen. Any kind of plagiarism will be strongly penalised.

Reassessment will be available for any student that has done all the exercises and exams, and whose overall results are over the mark of 3.5. The re-evaluation will take the form of a final exam.
