Brexit, self-government and the future of the EU

In the “White Paper on the Future of Europe” published by the European Commission in March 2017, sub-state powers are practically unmentioned. The Revista d’Estudis Autònoms i Federals - Journal of Self-Government seeks to offer a well-timed intervention on sub-state powers and the EU with a special issue on “Brexit, self-government and the future of the EU”.

This Special Issue aims to include a wide range of articles dealing with the short and long-term impacts of Brexit upon the strategies, role and institutional framework of the subnational units within and in relation to the EU. Thus, this special issue seeks to promote analyses addressing questions such as:

- How do EU territorial sub-state units develop their strategies to face the different consequences that Brexit would bring about?
- Which is the role sub-state units are taking in relation to the consequences of Brexit upon the policy areas falling under their powers?
- Which are the relations and alliances sub-state units develop towards other levels of government?
- Which is the role these units aim to have in a post-Brexit EU?
